

I stongly want the New Jersey state law regarding the Do Not Call List to be kept as strong as it is. It's nice to know that when the phone rings it's actually someone I want to talk to. If the law is weakened, a previous call from the telemarketer may be construed as doing business with the company, whether it was solicted or not from the person receiving the phone call. That would completely defeat the purpose of the Do Not Call list. Sometimes these unwanted calls continue to tie up your phone line, even if the person receiving the call hangs up. If someone is waiting for a doctor or other emergency call to come in, these unwanted phone calls can cause a public safety issue in addition to being annoying or harassing.